

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

This invention discloses novel ways of making electrooptic devices where the electrodes are made from conductive yarns. This allows fabrication of flexible and large area devices at an attractive cost. Applications of these devices are in displays, large-area variable optical transmission panels and for optical emmisivity control